Volume 11, Issue 20: Inspiration Goes A Long Way

Watching home organization videos lately has sparked my natural interest in organizing spaces. I am naturally very organized and my home is typically well organized and aesthetically set up.

Although some of the videos I have watched felt a notch lower than I am in my organization level or showed me things that I already know, I found myself making quite a bit of improvements in my home organization the last few weeks as a result of that exposure.

What I have learnt from this experience is that first, there's something to be learnt from everyone. I watched these videos mostly to unwind but they inspired me to up-my-game. Most of their ideas weren't relevant for my context but they inspired me to make improvements that are suitable for my context.

Secondly, inspiration goes a long way. You don't need anyone to tell you what to do. All you need is their inspiring example to nudge you in the right direction. On the same note, you don't need to copy someone's ideas. Your ideas are the best for your context.

Thirdly, I also learnt that it's very easy to settle. You may know you are good at something and close yourself off from learning more about it and advancing your understanding and expertise. That is how I felt when I found that there are more levels that I can take my home organization.

I am having so much fun implementing these improvements in my home organization and spaces in general. I reckon you may have no interest in home organization. But this is a nudge for you to open yourself up to learn more and up-your-game in an area that you feel you already have a good handle on, or that you are already a pro at.

For His Glory,
